Hong Kong became a Special Administrative Region of the People’s Republic of China on July 1, 1997. The “One Country, Two Systems” principle enshrined in its constitutional document, the Basic Law, provides Hong Kong with a high degree of autonomy in economic, trade, financial and monetary matters. The Basic Law also guarantees the retention of Hong Kong’s cherished civil liberties, rule of law, economic system, free movement of goods and capital, and status as a free port and separate customs territory.

Hong Kong maintains close trading relationships with the Mainland of China and the United States – respectively its largest and second largest trading partners. It is an important entrepôt for trade between the Mainland of China and the United States. In 2009, around 15 percent, or $33 billion, of Mainland China’s exports of goods to the U.S., and around 9 percent, or $7 billion, of Mainland China’s imports of goods from the U.S., routed through Hong Kong.

Hong Kong is the 13th largest destination for U.S. goods. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, U.S. exports to Hong Kong totaled $21 billion in 2009. In return, the value of Hong Kong exports to the U.S. totaled $3.5 billion.

The U.S., with 1,263 companies in Hong Kong, continues to top the list of countries running non-local companies in Hong Kong. In addition, the U.S. has made substantial inward direct investment in Hong Kong. As at end 2008, the U.S.’ total inward direct investment amounted to $31.9 billion at market price.

Hong Kong is firmly committed to an open market policy and is a staunch supporter of the multilateral trading system. Hong Kong takes seriously its rights and obligations as a separate and founding member of the World Trade Organization.

Illustrating Hong Kong’s commitment to free trade, Hong Kong was ranked the world’s freest economy in the Heritage Foundation’s 2010 Index of Economic Freedom and in the Economic Freedom of the World: 2010 Annual Report released by the Cato Institute.

The Hong Kong Economic and Trade Office in Washington, D.C. is the permanent representative of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region government in the United States. Its mission is to strengthen Hong Kong’s economic, trade, investment and cultural ties with the United States.

The office maintains close working relations with the U.S. Administration and Congress on a variety of issues, including port security, strategic trade control, anti-money laundering and anti-terrorist financing measures, intellectual property rights, health protection, and trade promotion.

In addition to the Washington office, the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region Government maintains offices in New York and San Francisco.
